

121 Software Engineering

Software engineering is a specialty focused on developing reliable and efficient software systems, the cost of development and maintenance of which is affordable and meet customer's requirements.

Today, these specialists are highly employable, they are engaged in the development of domestic and international software projects and earn a fair wage for their work. The demand for software engineering professionals will be constantly rising!

A bachelor graduate can hold the following positions:

- Information technology specialist;
- programmer (database);
- System programmer;
- Trainee teacher;
- Computer software engineer;
- Software engineer;
- Computer systems engineer;
- Access administrator;
- Database administrator;
- System administrator;
- Specialist in the organization of security of limited access information;
- Specialist in software development and testing;
- Specialist in computer programs development.